Dragon Clothespin Puppets

Silly Dinosaur coloring pages

With several sets of elaborate shadow puppets in my craft baggage, I always wanted to give a go to something quite different and make a simple puppet from some commonplace object. I couldn't hold in a laugh, listening to my son trying to speak in a tiny voice for the unicorn and in a big gruff voice for the dragon. Make these simple clothespin puppets with kids, using our free printable designs as the starting point! A fun STEAM project, with the puppets working around the mechanism of a clothespin. Now if you haven't guessed by now, today I'm sharing a quick roundup post with 30 of our favorite clothespin kids craft tutorials that can be found on our website right now. But what if I told you that with just a dollar investment, you could make over 30 clothespin crafts with your child right now?! Yup, that's right... I have THIRTY kid craft tutorials on Glued To My Crafts right now, that involved just a single bag of wooden clothespins I picked up my local dollar store. For that reason, I have been eyeing socks and gloves for ages. Just make sure that the paper parts stay in place for the first minute and let it sit until dry afterwards. Why, the same attempts on my husband's part put me in hysterics as well - you can hear him in the video tutorial below. It sets quickly and there is a possibility for making the head part sit a little higher, thus making sure that it wouldn't interfere with the jaw. While I thought it was an interesting engineering project, my son and my husband (!) had a blast making an improvised performance with the beasts. Once you are ready, you are going to make that $1 purchase turn into endless craft fun with your kid! Remember - crafting with kids has so many benefits (like coordination, fine motor skills and bonding moments.) This clothespin kid crafts collection post is the perfect start to making today extra crafty on a simple budget. On the photos, I use the glue gun. All of which are perfect to make ANY DAY OF THE YEAR! Now without ado, keep scrolling to check out the links and pictures listed below in this quick clothespin arts and crafts roundup. With just one bag and supplies I already had in my craft stash, we crafted them into beautiful ornaments, pretend play puppet pieces and even made some creative gift tags for our holiday presents. Incidentally, absolutely perfect as a base for a paper puppet that opens and closes its mouth. Watch the Video of Making Clothespin Puppets. If you want to make your own puppets, colour or print ours, get the template by putting your email below! Sure there are so several uses in our every day life for clothespins. There is a coloured version as well as the one for colouring, both available as free printable for a quick crafting and theatrical experience. From there, you are going to pick your favorites and click on the provided links under each picture, to be taken to the full & original tutorials on our website. Older kids can easily create their own puppets, while younger ones can try our printable design. My goal was to prove - to myself if no one else - that making a theatrical performance with kids can be very easy. These projects can be of course followed to a "T" but we really hope you take our ideas as a starting point and use them as inspiration! Happy crafting, my dear friends and please don't forget to share your craft creations on our Facebook page to admire from a far! We can't wait to see what you decide to tackle first on our list! Clothespins are fun! Commonly available, made of wood and featuring a mechanism that can fascinate children just by itself. The advantage of using white glue would be that you could adjust the position of the jaws to your satisfaction. They're made in two parts: the lower jaw that gets glued on the lower part of the clothespin and the rest of the head that goes on the upper part and overlaps the jaw a little. In my opinion, the project is a fun combination of art and engineering. You can hang your clothes, pinch something shut or even using them to store your ribbon scraps. I made a dragon and a unicorn for my kids. But in the end, it was a clothespin that prompted us to creation this time. They're reading The Hobbit right now, so the dragon was naturally named Smaug. All the same, usual white glue would be a safer alternative for smaller kids - it worked fine when I tried it. Then you are going to make a game plan and head to your local Dollar Tree to grab a simple pack of $1 clothespins.
